

Harry Daud

Harry hails from Long Pa Sia, the land of the once fierce *Lun Dayeh headhunters. The village is located at the southern most region of Sabah just a few kilometers from Indonesian Kalimantan. Because of the remoteness of his village, Harry learned about the Borneon jungle at a very early age. He started going out hunting and fishing with his dad when he was just 4. That is how life is as a young boy in remote Borneo villages. Even today, if you give Harry just a parang (machete) and drop him off in the middle of our rainforest somewhere, he will not only survive but thrive. "I don't like living in the cities cos I have to buy everything, but because of necessities such as schools and medical facilities, I have little choices! In the jungle we have everything we need, even medicines," he says.

Because of his upbringing, enthusiasm and creativity, there is little wonder he is our senior Survival Instructor and Jungle Trek Leader. He has led countless adventurous and school groups into our jungle. He is also a qualified rafting guide and regularly leads mountain biking tours with Fieldskills as well. He is a man of many skills and talents and is exceptionally good at every one of them - he is one of a kind!
